Ali Baqeri-Kani

In September 2021, Foreign Minister Hossein Amir-Abdollahian appointed Ali Baqeri-Kani as Deputy Foreign Minister and director of the Foreign Ministry Political Directorate. His predecessor, Abbas Araqchi, directed the nuclear negotiations that resulted in the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA). Baqeri-Kani previously served as a senior nuclear negotiator during the Ahmadinejad administration in the late 2000s and early 2010s and continued to perform a similar role as Deputy Foreign Minister. In May of 2024, he ascended to become Acting Foreign Minister after Amir-Abdollahian's unexpected death along with President Ebrahim Raisi. In 2026, Ali Bagheri Kani became the Deputy Secretary for International Affairs at Iran's regime's Supreme National Security Council (SNSC).

Well-Connected Family

The Baqeri-Kani family exercises significant political influence and is related to the late Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei through marriage. Ali's brother, Mesbaholhoda, married Khamenei's daughter, Hoda. Their father, Mohammad-Baqer, was previously a member of the Assembly of Experts, a powerful body ostensibly tasked with exercising oversight over and managing the appointment of Supreme Leaders. Khamenei appointed Mohammad-Baqer as a board member of Imam Sadeq University, which counts many senior politicians among its alumni and is tasked with indoctrinating the next generation of Iranian bureaucrats.

The Baqeri-Kani family has controlled the University for decades, presiding over its evolution into an exclusive, cult-like institution designed to foster a cohort of fanatical bureaucrats—referred to as Imam Sadeghis. Ali's uncle, Ayatollah Mohammad-Reza Mahdavi-Kani, was dean of the University from its founding in the 1980s until his death in 2014. He was also a prominent political figure, serving as chairman of the Assembly of Experts. His brother, Mohammad-Baqer, was a deputy dean for a period as well. In these roles, the brothers inserted other family members in prominent positions and posts at the University. In 2018, then-Judiciary chief Sadeq Larijani appointed Hossein-Ali Sa'di, Assembly of Experts member, to replace Mohammad-Said Mahdavi-Kani as the interim dean following his death.

The University generates revenues through an investment holding that operates the Jame'eh factory, Hayan pharmaceutical, and two prominent shopping malls in Tehran. It also relies on assistance from the regime and wealthy benefactors, and political corruption. In recent years, the university-owned pharmaceutical company acquired a government rate of foreign exchange, which was significantly lower than the free market rate, and used it to import steam cleaners.

The University essentially acts as a training pipeline for the regime's political cadre and elite, designed to indoctrinate Iran's next generation of civil servants. Established shortly after the Islamic Republic's founding in the early 1980s, the curriculum is based on teaching seminary studies to every student in addition to modern sciences and humanities. Its campus is located at the site of Harvard University's branch in Iran that was confiscated following the Revolution. In recent years, the Imam Sadeghi cohort has attained significant political power across Iran's bureaucracy. It attained key positions in Ebrahim Raisi's government and bureaucratic institutions – with the aim of fulfilling Khamenei's vision of a more ideologically pure regime and a "second phase" in the Islamic Revolution.

Career

Ali Baqeri-Kani was born in 1967 and graduated from Imam Sadeq University with a degree in economics and Islamic studies. In the 1990s, he briefly worked at the Islamic Republic of Iran Broadcasting \(IRIB\) before working for the Foreign Ministry's international directorate. In 2007, Saeed Jalili was appointed Secretary of the SNSC and left the Foreign Ministry. He convinced Baqeri-Kani, who was serving as European Affairs deputy at the time, to move to the SNSC Secretariate in 2008. Baqeri-Kani acted as Jalili's deputy at the SNSC. Through the end of the Ahmadinejad administration in 2013, Jalili and Baqeri-Kani served as lead nuclear negotiators for the Islamic Republic. Their term was marked by Tehran's intransigence, increasing international isolation, and mounting sanctions imposed by the United Nations, the United States, and the European Union.

In 2013, Baqeri-Kani acted as the campaign director for Jalili's unsuccessful run for the presidency. After the Rouhani Administration assumed power in 2013, Baqeri-Kani was promptly removed from the SNSC due to differences in political perspectives. Subsequently, he acted as a critic of nuclear negotiations that culminated in the JCPOA on IRGC-linked television outlets like the Ofogh network. He also wrote on the subject for a website linked to the Basij paramilitary University and Imam Sadeq University. Furthermore, he penned an unusually long introduction to the Persian translation of the memoir of American official Wendy Sherman about the nuclear negotiations, in which he defended his own tenure as a negotiator and criticized the Rouhani administration.

In 2019, then-Judiciary branch chief Ebrahim Raisi appointed Baqeri-Kani as international affairs deputy and the director of the Judiciary Human Rights Center. This move signaled that Baqeri-Kani, along with other Imam Sadeghis, had become closer to Raisi – as per Khamenei's direction. As Raisi's political stock was rising with Khamenei's support, Baqeri-Kani abandoned Jalili, whose political influence continued to wane (Jalili ran and lost again in the 2021 presidential race). Baqeri-Kani was among several former Jalili associates who had become closer to Raisi in recent years, reflecting Khamenei's efforts to consolidate his authority through the elevation of select ideological allies.

Established in the 2000s, the Judiciary Human Rights Center acts as the diplomatic arm of the Judiciary branch, representing the Islamic Republic in international conventions regarding human rights. Baqeri-Kani's predecessor was Javad Larijani, an adviser to Supreme Leader and brother of former Parliament Speaker Ali Larijani. At the Judiciary Human Rights Center, Javad Larijani denied reports that have documented and alleged human rights violations in Iran and attacked international human rights institutions. Larijani also rejected international human rights conventions, arguing for the regime's "Islamic" human rights conventions. Baqeri-Kani essentially continued those actions and sought to globalize the regime's so-called Islamic human rights conventions.

After Raisi was declared winner in the 2021 presidential race, Iranian media speculated whether Baqeri-Kani would be the next Foreign Minister, since he was photographed in Raisi's meetings with foreign dignitaries. However, he eventually appointed Hossein Amir-Abdollahian, who maintained deep connections to the Quds Force and was more experienced in the Foreign Ministry. From a policy angle, Amir-Abdollahian also had greater experience on Arab affairs, a shortcoming Baqeri-Kani has since sought to improve.

Tenure as Deputy Foreign Minister

In September of 2021, after Raisi ascended to the presidency, Baqeri-Kani was appointed as Deputy Foreign Minister for political affairs. When he took office, his track record indicated that he would continue to act as a hardline revolutionary diplomat, given his close personal, professional, and family ties to the Supreme Leader and his connections to the increasingly influential Imam Sadeghi cohort.

As Deputy Foreign Minister, Baqeri-Kani has resumed his earlier role as one of the regime's key nuclear negotiators. In the years after taking office, he repeatedly defended continued nuclear negotiations. His most significant argument is that they are an "instrument for securing (Iran's) national interests," given that they provide the opportunity for exacting significant concessions. According to Baqeri-Kani, one of the most important concessions would be a significant reduction or suspension of United States (U.S.) sanctions on Iran. As a result, pushed for JCPOA negotiations to continue, even after talks collapsed in March of 2022. Further demonstrating that he was not working in good faith, Baqeri-Kani maintained distance from International Atomic Energy Agency officials. In many ways, these efforts appear to have succeeded. The U.S. has continued to communicate with Iranian officials and tacitly support continued negotiations, even after acknowledging that the JCPOA is effectively "dead." Moreover, the Biden administration continually offered sanctions waivers to the regime as a negotiating strategy, and played directly into Baqeri-Kani's hands. Baqeri-Khan even boasted that Tehran had (by his count) ignored 11 deadlines set by the US and Europe during the negotiations. Acclaiming praise that no consequences were placed on Iran for these apparent failures, and highlighting the inability of the US and Europe to restore the accords while Iran dismissed their pressure and continued to stall.

As Deputy Foreign Minister, Baqeri-Kani also supported Raisi's efforts to pivot Iran toward authoritarian allies, by conducting official visits to Russia and China, facilitating efforts to cooperate on circumventing international sanctions, and arguing in favor of Iran's accession into BRICS. Furthermore, he worked to develop ties between Moscow and Hamas, facilitating meetings between leaders of the terrorist organization and Russian diplomats shortly after the attack against Israel on October 7, 2023. These activities coincided with Baqeri-Kani's threats to "pulverize" Israel, and promises to support Iran's terrorist proxies. Additionally, Baqeri-Kani took a key role in Raisi's overtures toward Latin American and African states in an effort to expand Iran's global reach.

Ascension to Acting Foreign Minister

Though he had long been seen as a potential future foreign minister, unexpected events accelerated Baqeri-Kani's career. On May 19, 2024, Raisi's helicopter crashed while travelling from Azerbaijan, killing the president and key government officials, including Amir-Abdollahian. After the Iranian government admitted that the president did not survive, Baqeri-Kani was confirmed as acting foreign minister by the Supreme Leader.

Given Baqeri-Kani's track record of seeking to exploit JCPOA negotiations for the Islamic Republic's benefit, facilitating Iran's overtures toward other authoritarian states, and supporting the axis of resistance, he furthered the Raisi administration's foreign policy approach.

Ultimately, Baqeri-Kani's unexpected ascension brought further synergy between the Office of the Supreme Leader, the IRGC, and government bureaucracies, and facilitated increased ideological alignment. This benefitted Khamenei's ambitions to further "purify" the regime, personalize his authority, and elevate hardline allies.

New Positions and Influence

Baqeri-Kani hosted Jordan's Foreign Minister Ayman Safadi in August 2024 (first visit by a Senior Jordanian official to Iran in 20 years) to discuss regional developments following the assassination of Hamas leader Ismail Haniyeh in Tehran. Haniyeh's assassination, which overshadowed President Masoud Pezeshkian's inauguration, came hours after Senior Hezbollah Military Commander Fuad Shukur was killed in Beirut.

In mid-September 2024 Baqeri-Kani was appointed secretary of Iran's Strategic Council on Foreign Relations, succeeding Abbas Araghchi who left the position to become Foreign Minister. On September 10, 2025, then Supreme National Security Council Secretary Ali Larijani appointed Baqeri-Kani as his Deputy Secretary for International Affairs. Ali Baqeri-Kani's appointment was likely forced on the Pezeshkian administration as he was not from the same faction in the Islamic Republic's political elite, hailing from the Raisi administration.

Baqeri-Kani's brother, Mesbaholhoda Bagheri-Kani, was killed in the Israeli strikes that targeted Ali Khamenei on February 28, 2026. Mojtaba Khamenei replaced his father as Supreme Leader.

UNITED AGAINST NUCLEAR IRAN

During the U.S. military buildup in early February, Baqeri-Kani stated Iran would not transfer its enriched uranium abroad, and that such proposals were out of the agenda. This was an attempt to clear up the Iranian position on rumors of Moscow offering to take in the 440 kg of enriched uranium. Baqeri-Kani was a member of the Iranian delegation that participated in the Islamabad, Pakistan talks on April 10, 2026.

Reports later surfaced of divisions within the Iranian negotiating team. Speaker of Parliament Mohammad Bagher Ghalibaf, President Masoud Pezeshkian, and others had reportedly signed a letter to Supreme Leader Mojtaba Khamenei warning that the economic situation was deteriorating rapidly and that the Islamic Republic had no choice but to negotiate seriously with the Trump administration. Ali Baqeri-Kani pointedly refused to sign the letter—a nod to his membership in hardline circles in Tehran. Later the letter was leaked by these same radical currents, pointing to fissures in the Iranian leadership.
